Magnify Objects 100,000 Times With New Device

In all fields of science, no tool is more commonly used than the ordinary optical microscope, which can give magnifications up to 2,500 diameters. Yet, despite the magnifying power of these instruments, they have not been developed to the point where scientists can see everything they want to see; as a result, inhabitants of the smallest world, such as viruses that pass through the finest grain filters, have escaped detection and analysis.

For years, scientists have believed these sub-microscopic organisms would be forever closed to them. But lately they learned otherwise. Described at the meeting of the American Philosophical society in Philadelphia was a radically new kind of microscope that would open up a realm of knowledge heretofore hidden.

Developed over a several-year period in the RCA laboratories at Philadelphia under the direction of Dr. Vladimir K. Zworykin, noted for his contributions to television, the new instrument is an electron microscope. Between it and the ordinary microscope there is no resemblance. Looking more like a large telescope than the ordinary microscope, it uses electrons (electrified particles) instead of light to detect the previously invisible organisms.

The instrument is capable of magnifying extremely small objects 100,000 times their actual size. With this power, scientists may be expected to throw light on the mystery of how viruses and proteins reproduce themselves, and also on the structure of proteins.

Before its demonstration at the A. P. S. meeting, the electron microscope already had demonstrated its worth. In tests, during which enlargements were made up to 25,000 diameters, the $18,000 device disclosed why streptococci have always been seen in chain formation, like beads on a string, and it revealed for the first time how thread-like growths connect each individual organism with its neighbor.

Sulfamido Cuts Death

Dr. Wallace E. Herrell and Dr. Alex E. Brown of Rochester, Minn., report that the use of sulfanilamide, sulfapyridine and sulfathiazol has cut the death rate of septicemia, or blood poisoning, in half since the drugs were first introduced. Their report was based on 155 cases observed from 1937 to 1939, which were compared with the same number of cases from 1934 to 1936, before the sulfamido drugs were available. Their analysis showed that only 32 per cent of the septicemia victims from 1934 to 1936 recovered, as opposed to a 60 per cent recovery in the 103 patients from the 1937 to 1939 group who received treatment. The other 52 patients in the later group, they said, contracted the infection before the drugs were in widespread use, and the recovery rate in their case was 36 per cent.

THE CALL OF WAR

(From Baltimore News)

Send me your youth, the best of your youth,
The courageous, clean and strong—
From city, hamlet and countryside
Where life is a careless song.
Have him forget his house of dreams
With ivy 'round the door,
For I have a task for his eager feet,
wallowing deep in gore.

Send me your youth, the pick of your youth,
You may keep the other kind.
I'll tear the song from his careless lips—
The dreams from his boyish mind.
I'll drive him where the cannons roar,
And rend him limb from limb—
And when I'm through you can have him back,
Or all that is left of him.

As he carries my banners high—
And prate to him of a sacred cause
While he stumbles out to die.

best of your youth,

And I've left their bones in a shallow grave
On some beleagured shore.
I've plundered the world and laid it waste

Many Men Flock To Camp Lee Seeking Work

Transients have been pouring into the Camp Lee area by the hundreds in the past few days, seeking jobs. Contractors have started work on construction of the new Camp Lee, which will house some 22,000 men for the Army.

It is reported that the contractors have put on all the men they can use, and now have around 1,000 men working.

Major C. W. Leary, construction quartermaster, who is in charge of all the work, said that the work is progressing satisfactorily, according to schedule. Doyle, Russell and Wise are the construction contractors and Wiley and Wilson are the engineering contractors.

The Norfolk and Western railway is preparing to lay tracks for a siding into the area.

The main camp will not be ready until March.

Substitute for Old Chores

"Various factors in modern life have made it more and more difficult for growing children to take an important part in family activities," says Prof. Ernest Osborne of Columbia Teachers college.

"Chores in a city apartment or even in a suburban home are almost non-existent. It is only natural that children are given little chance to share in the remaining responsibilities of the home or in the planning of home activities.

"It is necessary for parents to make conscious efforts from the earliest years of the child's life to include him in the planning of family activities and to allow him to assume certain responsibilities for which he is adequate. Only as he gets the feeling or the satisfaction that comes from helping to plan a vacation or some other project, will he develop the basic pattern of cooperation essential to good citizenship."

Vanity Important for A Pleasing Appearance

Unquestionably, facial ugliness, whether due to congenital or acquired defects, even if superficial, imposes a serious handicap on one thus afflicted, which frequently destroys his happiness and endangers his chance of economic survival. Yet in nearly all cases, even the gravest, these defects can be eliminated or greatly reduced by skillful plastic surgery, and the individual can thereby be released from the bondage of abnormality.

The correction of deformity may often be likened to cutting the Gordian knot in a patient's psyche. Usually, after such a correction, there is a noticeable change not only in the appearance of the patient, but in his bearing as well. The sense of inferiority disappears with the abnormality which produced it, and its place is taken by a new confidence, a fresh, healthy outlook on life.

It is popularly supposed that those who seek the plastic surgeon's aid are prompted by motives of vanity. But if by vanity we mean the desire to look one's best, to cultivate the good will of society, and to present to the world an attractive appearance rather than a repulsive one, then it is important to be vain.

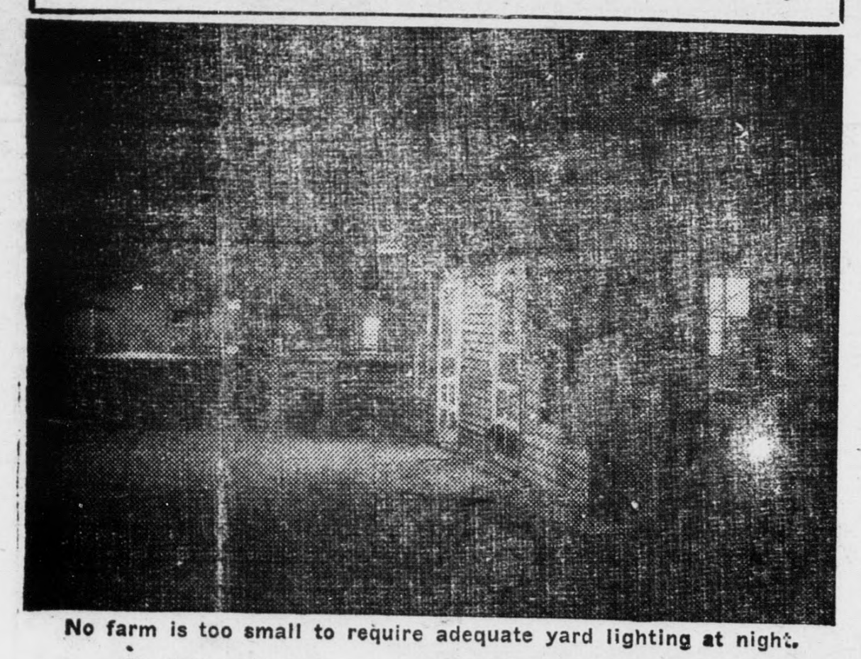
To Avert Theft and Accident, Light Farmyard Electrically



No farm is too small to require adequate yard lighting at night.

By IRA MILLER
Farm Electrification Bureau

NEARLY all of the thefts, and many of the accidents, on the farm occur at night. Under cover of darkness, a gang can drive up in a truck and make off with several head of stock, large quantities of produce or even some of the more costly pieces of farm equipment. Or the farmer and members of his family may trip over unseen objects in the yard or fall or step through unsuspected openings in the floors of the various outbuildings.

Farms with electric service have the ideal solution to the night lighting problem. For electric lights in the farmyard and outbuildings will greatly lessen if not entirely eliminate the likelihood of after-dark thefts and injuries. With their aid, many chores which otherwise would have to wait for daylight—can be done after dark or before dawn.

In the limited space allowed me, it is not possible to go into a detailed discussion of the wiring and lighting of the various farm buildings. Information and recommendations on this can be obtained from your state college, university or extension agent, the electrical manufacturers or any experienced and reliable electrical contractor.

For the effective lighting of the average farmyard, only three lighting units are necessary—one each at the house, barn and garage. They should be at least 15 feet above the ground—to allow a wide spread of light—and equipped with proper reflectors, without which much of the light will escape uselessly upward. Inside-frosted bulbs of 100 or 150 watts should be used, and the holders should be of the weatherproof type.

Although it slightly increases the wiring cost, for greatest convenience it is recommended that the yard lights be controlled by three or four-way switches. With the former it is possible to turn the lights on and off from both the house and another point, say the barn. With the latter, they also can be controlled from an upstairs bedroom — particularly desirable when prowlers are about.

If the lights can be mounted sufficiently high from the ground on the various buildings, or if the farmer cuts and sets his own poles, a yard lighting installation of three lamps —including all materials and an electrician's services—will cost from $45 to $60, with the average nearer the lower figure. If poles are necessary, and they are installed by the power company, they will cost about $10 each.

Considering its reasonable cost, you will find that yard lighting is one of the most convenient and valuable uses of electricity on the farm.

Group To Study Poverty In Virginia

(By VPA)

A group of the nation's leading authorities on population research have conferred with officials of the State Planning Board, Virginia Polytechnic Institute, and the University of Virginia, on three correlated Virginia studies which Governor Price termed probably the most important ever undertaken in the field of State planning to date.

The Governor declared that it was not enough to know that there was widespread rural poverty in Virginia, that there slums in the cities, that some agricultural lands could not sustain an adequate level of living, that "unsatisfactory" urban patterns reflected unwise land use and that some kinds of industrial development might impair social and cultural values or accentuate poverty. "There must be inquiry into why these things are so," he asserted. "And there must be far sighted endeavor to develop policies and procedures which will bring about improvements in the situation."

The State Planning Board is conducting a population study with a grant of $90,000 from the General Education Board. Related studies industrial research, directed by the University of Virginia, and land use being conducted by V. P. I.

"Build-Up" Good News For Suffering Women

Much of women's periodic distress may be unnecessary!

Many who suffer from headaches, nervousness, cramp-like pain, other symptoms of functional dysmenorrhea due to malnutrition are helped by CARDUI.

Main way it helps relieve periodic distress is by increasing appetite and flow of gastric juice. Thus it often aids digestion; helps build strength, energy, resistance to periodic disturbances.

Others find help for periodic discomfort this way: Start a few days before and take CARDUI until "the time" has passed. Women have used CARDUI more than 50 years.

Va. Mental Cases

Figures recently released show that ninety-eight out of 100,000 of the State's general population enter mental institutions of Virginia yearly. This compares with a national average of 60.50. However, 24.6 of each 100,000 of the State's population go to a mental hospital because of inebriety, the State Hospital Board has revealed, and it is this fact which is responsible for Virginia's high rate of mental admissions.
